Share your thoughts on Sergio

In a European Tour event won by Dustin Johnson there was an "incident" involving Sergio Garcia where he deliberately damaged four greens and was disqualified. This followed, by the way, an incident where he lost his temper in a bunker the previous day and threw a tantrum striking sand out of the bunker with his club and feet.

The Tour has now moved on and consider the incident closed. What's your view? Is a disqualification enough of a punishment? Is it one rule for some and another rule for the rest of us? Share your thoughts here.

Shafts and myths

Let’s bust some myths and misunderstandings

You may have read or heard some say that “the shaft is the engine of the golf club”.

That metaphor isn’t right. If there’s an engine, then it’s you.
You create the energy. The shaft controls and channels that energy.
The shaft is more the transmission; allowing the shaft to return the clubhead square to the target at impact. The shaft transfers the energy you create to the clubhead.

One of the questions you have to ask yourself is: do you have the right transmission for your engine and vehicle? Are you maximizing the return on the energy you're creating; and are you returning the clubhead square to target at impact?

"If you're losing distance as you get older each year, then it's really worthwhile looking at options to create faster clubhead speed and a better energy transfer."

Now let's check

Ready for your transmission to be checked over? We have examples of shaft changes that have added as much as 30 yards to tee shots. With irons, we find significant improvements in shot dispersion.

Talent is overrated

Geoff Colvin, in his theory of “Deliberate Practice”, contends that you can all be so much better at golf, and much quicker than you imagine, with a better approach to practice.

This isn’t about beating balls until your hands bleed.
It’s about having a sensible structure that accommodates the commitment you feel you can make.
There are four essential steps according to Colvin’s principals:

A personal plan that starts from your current reality, identifying the areas you can most easily improve, quickly.

Go beyond your comfort zone, practicing shots you are not comfortable with. Choosing to hit shots you can’t execute consistently or adequately might not seem like fun, but you need to push your boundaries

If you don’t have a lot of time for practice, then limit the new skills you’re trying to develop. You need, through repetition, to sear the new movements required into the brain.

You need continual and specific feedback. You need to record your swing in practice or have a coach present. If the result is bad, you need the diagnosis as feedback. If the result is good, you need the positive deliberately.

affirmation of the movements that created the result.
