The countdown has begun for the June 2020 announcement of South Africa's Top 100 Courses, and we're inviting all golfers to participate in the rankings on a newly developed website.

Former Golf Digest editor Stuart McLean has launched the SA Top 100 Courses digital platform at www.satop100courses.com

Our aim is to make this the home of club golfers in South Africa. We want to hear your stories and achievements, and create forums.

Each of the current Top 100 courses has a page on the website, with a link where golfers who register can rate the conditioning of courses they play, and 8 separate club facilities. You can give your vote from 1 to 5 on the pro shop, halfway house, service, pace of play, practice facilities, 19th hole, locker room and course etiquette.

   @SATop100Courses

How many of the Top 100 have you played?
Tick them off on our platform and see where you rank both nationally and regionally.

Had an unusual hole-in-one?
Look at our link to all the South African records and achievements compiled by Golf Digest.

We're recording all the lowest rounds ever shot in SA.
We've identified the course record at every Top 100 layout.

Find your truth

Know where you're going

Launching your golf ball onto a soaring and accurate trajectory is one of the most satisfying feelings in golf. Most golfers are playing with a lie angle that makes this more difficult than it should be.

Find your lie >

1 degree makes a big difference

When your lie angle is out by just 1 degree, you can stray up to 10 feet wide of your target. That's the difference between a birdie opportunity and a pressure putt to save par.

A longer tee shot means a shorter iron into the green, and we can all hit shorter irons more easily.

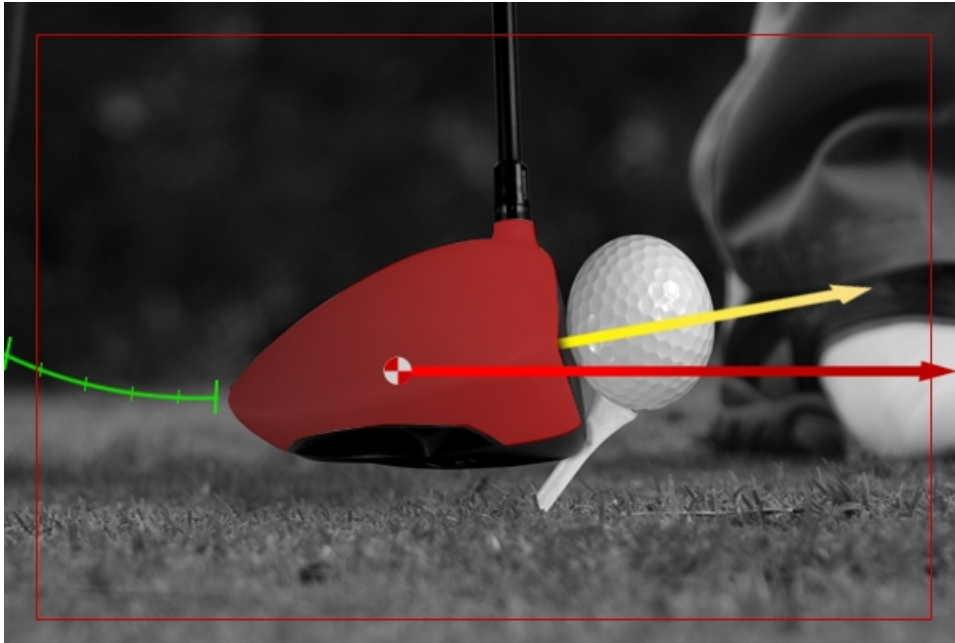

HOW'S YOUR ATTACK?

Most amateurs hit down on the ball with driver, creating a steep angle

Most amateurs hit down on the ball with driver, creating what we call a negative 'angle of attack'. This adds extra spin and reduces distance. To hit it further, what you want is a flatter or positive angle of attack, so you're 'hitting up' on the ball.
