There's no place like the golf course

"You have no idea how much I look forward to my lessons, it's my only escape at the moment from the difficulties of COVID-19."

Practice with purpose Mastering ups and downs

Most amateur golfers hit less than half of the greens in regulation, so getting up and down consistently is invaluable. Practice games are an excellent way to develop those scrambling skills.

Have you tried the par-18 challenge?

Set down nine balls at different spots around the practice green and try to get each one up and down in two shots. The closer you get to par-18 on this challenge, the more shots you'll see off your scorecard.

This is an excellent benchmarking skills test that's well worth challenging yourself with at least once a month.

Practice makes permanent

Make sure you're working on the right things in practice. Improving how you practise can make your time on course more fun. When we see you again, let's talk practice, or we could also

You drive for more than show

Yes, the statistics on the major tours now tell us that those with the longest tee shots are making a great living, but you're not trying to make a living from the game. Most of you are looking for a great social experience and a good or better golfing experience.

Building consistency off the tee, while finding ways to go further, will open the pathway to better scores AND more holes to enjoy. It even makes the walk and social banter more fun to know you're well-placed.

The latest technology is part of the solution to a better game, but we also need to start you off correctly at setup. Many golfers set up aiming wide right (right-handers). The ball position will likely lower the launch angle and lose metres. And poor posture won't make a good rotation easy to achieve, causing inconsistency and a further loss of distance.

Change the game

When did you upgrade your game from the tee? If you're competitive, then significantly reducing the distance to the hole on your 2nd, changes the game. If you want to explore 'further' AND 'better'
