Your scoring zone

Wedge designers are making it easier

Modern wedges are designed to enable you to hit good shots without making perfect contact. But there's a catch. To benefit from this design, you need the right bounce for your swing. Play with the right bounce, using the right technique, and you'll be a lot better around the greens.

Bounce changes how a wedge interacts with the turf. That means you don't have to make perfect contact with the ball. If you're using the bounce correctly, it allows the club to skid into the ball.

Master this range

The bounce that's right for you depends on your swing (angle of attack) and the type of wedge shots you play. Let's find yours and make scoring from anywhere around the green a lot easier for you.

It's playtime

A fun way to improve your wedge play.

There's nothing like some healthy, fun competition to develop your skills. That's why we love the par-18 challenge. It's the perfect way to make short-game practice time with a friend or family member more fun and effective.

Place 9 balls at different spots around the green. 3 test your chip and run skills. 3 test your greenside bunker skills. 3 test your short pitch shots. With each skill, there's an easy, medium, and hard test. Make sure you putt out competitively and keep score, as this should also put pressure on your putting technique and ability.

How close can you get to 18?

Are you hitting it close enough, but not sinking putts? Or are you way off target with your wedges and giving yourself too much to do with the putter? Let's schedule some time at the practice green together and get you closer to 18.
