Shake hands with the target

Performance Tip of the Week

By Michael Balderstone, BSI Founder and PGA Master Professional

Here is a great drill to get the correct feeling of hand and forearm release through impact:

1. Without a club; take your golf posture, hang your right arm (for right-handers) down in its normal position and place your left hand on your chest.
2. Take a backswing with your right arm and your normal body motions.
3. From the top of the backswing, swing down smoothly and turn through the impact zone to a position where you are 'shaking hands with the target' (3 o'clock position from face on).
4. You should notice that your right forearm has rolled over smoothly, your weight has shifted to the left smoothly and you have also turned your hips and torso to face the target.
5. Repeat over and over.

The beauty of this drill is that it is simple to execute and can be done anywhere, from the office and living room to the practice tee, or even during your round of golf.
